Dear Ms. Hesse:

As a registered nurse, I have firsthand knowledge of our nation's woeful healthcare system. Many of my colleagues are confronted with shortages and inadequate supplies on a daily basis. That is why I am deeply troubled by the federal government's continued pursuit of the Microsoft lawsuit.

These lawsuits have been drawn out for four years, costing taxpayers upwards of $35 million. That money is sorely needed in our healthcare system, and could have been put to good use by doctors and nurses throughout our country.

I understand that there is now a proposed consent decree on the table between Microsoft and the Department of Justice that would address many of the major charges against the company. I support this agreement. It's time that we let everybody get back to work solving the real problems facing our nation - like fixing our healthcare system and getting more funding to hospitals.

Please call me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Zago
